50 YEARS – BARRY GUY

LONDON JAZZ COMPOSERS ORCHESTRA

Die Abenteuerreise startete 1970. Um den Londoner Bassisten und Komponisten Barry Guy versammelten sich einige der innovativsten Musiker einer neuen Generation: Pioniere, die in Europa eine Musik entwickelten, welche die Grenzen zwischen modernem Jazz und Neuer Musik, zwischen Improvisation und avancierten kompositorischen Techniken aufhob. Was als kollektives Abenteuer begann, entwickelte sich über die Jahre zu einem eigenständigen Orchester, getragen von Barry Guys Charisma und seiner Gabe, herausragende Musiker um sich zu scharen und deren Individualität in seine kompositorischen Formen zu integrieren.

Intakt Records hat viele der grossen Werke von Barry Guy mit dem London Jazz Composers Orchestra produziert sowie die wichtigen frühen Werke neu aufgelegt. Die CD-Sammlung des LJCO birgt einige der bedeutendsten, auch der schönsten und berührendsten Orchesterwerke der heutigen Zeit. Das 50-jährige Jubiläum soll diese musikalischen Schätze erneut ins Scheinwerferlicht rücken: Damit diese Musik, die bereits Generationen von MusikerInnen in ihrer Arbeit beeinflusst hat, weitere HörerInnen beglücken kann.

Intakt Records

The adventure began in 1970. Some of the most innovative musicians of a new generation centred around the London bassist and composer Barry Guy: pioneers who were developing a kind of music in Europe which abolished the distinctions between Modern Jazz and New Music, between improvisation and advanced compositional techniques. Beginning as a collective endeavour, over the years it evolved into an independent orchestra, buoyed by Barry Guy's charisma and his talent for gathering outstanding musicians around him, integrating their individuality into his compositional forms.

Intakt Records produced many of Barry Guy's greatest works with the London Jazz Composers Orchestra and has reissued the most important early works. The LJCO CD collection contains some of the most significant, as well as the most beautiful and touching, orchestral works of our time. The fiftieth anniversary commemorations aim to bring some of these musical treasures back into the spotlight, so that this music, which has already influenced the work of generations of musicians can benefit many more listeners.

“A great anthem. Barry Guy’s Harmos resembles a musical manifesto – a work which sets structure and freedom in a dialectic field of tension and commits itself to one of the fundamental characteristics of music: melody. A celebration, a ceremony.”

Bert Noglik, Leipzig

“Ode is a landmark work. Conceived as a ‘social framework’ for improvisers, it is a brilliant response to the difficulty of combining what were considered to be irreconcilable musical philosophies. Inspired by Olivier Messiaen’s masterpiece of orchestral coloration, Chronochromie, Guy devised and disguised structures, a series of philosophical quiddities to which the orchestra – both as collective and as a sum of expressive individuals – were asked to respond. The result is, as John Corbett suggests, not dense in the way that orchestral tutti are dense. It is dense in that the level of musical communication is such that every statement implies more than it states, creates networks of interaction between players, between constituent instrumental groups, and between types of musical response. If the latter sounds unclear, it is possible to hear players interacting vertically, rhythmically, timbrally, but also in constituent sub-groups, much as Guy was to do more formally much later in Portraits. Hearing Ode many years on, and in the context of later and – in some ways – even more ambitious projects, what comes across most of all is that integrity of purpose and unity of musical language. It stands as one of the masterpieces of European improvisation.”
